Frequently Asked Questions

What will EML do with your dispute?

We will commence investigating your dispute five (5) business days from receiving the signed and completed form.

What is involved in resolving my dispute?

Like any dispute, evidence is required before a resolution can be made. Financial institutions that issue debit cards operate within rules set by card schemes such as Mastercard or Visa and in the case of personal transactions only, the Electronic Funds Transfer Code of Conduct. These rules give a merchant or financial institution the opportunity to prove a transaction is valid before we are able to charge the transaction back to them.

How long will it take to resolve my dispute?

Once the required information has been provided, disputes are usually resolved within 60 days. However some can take much longer, due to delays in getting information from merchants or overseas financial institutions. In instances where further time is required, EML will advise you. EML will keep you updated as to the progress of your dispute each time we action your case throughout the dispute process. Please note parts of the process can take more than 30 days, and no contact during this period is normal as your dispute is in progress. Should you wish to speak to us about your dispute, please call EML Support on 1300 739 889.

What happens if I don't raise my dispute within 60 days from the date of transaction?

If you raise your dispute with EML after 60 days from the date of transaction, EML may not be able to assist as Mastercard or Visa governs timeframes for action.

Is there a fee for dispute lodgement?

In the event we are unsuccessful in disputing the transaction and it is found this form has been lodged fraudulently, a disputed transaction fee will be incurred.
